La Grande Jatte by Georges Seurat 1884-6. Art Institute Chicago. This later bustle fashion was very molded to the body, and the heavy corset gave an armor-like rigidity to the silhouette.

This particular image was a cartoon character drawn by the American artist Charles Dana Gibson. For twenty years, he satirized society with his image of 'The New Woman,' who was competitive, sporty and emancipated as well as beautiful.
These fashion images from magazines and catalogues of the era are very representative of the styling of clothes people wore in the mid-1920s and 1940s.
